PRESIDENT HAROLD WILLIS DODDS

CLASS POEM

SAMUEL GARDNER WELLES, JR.

Our last spring dwindled to its last month, last day,
The hour of parting nears ;
Now we possess but memory of four years,
Although we linger while we may,
To smoke last pipes together—see them, hurled,
Shatter, as will our little world ;
To draw out our last singing—but the bell
Soon strikes the notes that say farewell.
And we know,
We who have seen the seasons come and go,
That year on far year,
Seniors in turn will hold
The steps that seniors held of old,
Nor know, nor care that we were here.

Yet will the ivy flourish as springs pass,
Magnolias and dogwood bloom again,
And violets, star-sprinkled in the grass ;
Still rooms will glow with firelight when the rain
Slants in a low tattoo against the pane ;
Gray towers rose-flushed in the breathless dawn,
The visible Princeton will remain,
And grow more lovely as slow years roll on,
None of her time-wrought charm or quiet beauty gone.

But as we leave this sentient place
We find that in our thoughts we trace,
Lighting odd corners of the mind
As scattered cigarettes glow while we sing,
Not what is seen, but sensed here : bickering,
Sun-bathing, study, pledges signed,
Forming of friendships, Commons food,
Chapel and George's, Prince campaigns,
Proctors and precepts, movies booted,
Bull sessions, duckboards, autumn rains,
Room-drawings, hour tests, deans and drinks,
Body-building, proms and dinks,
Theses, football, lectures, duns,
Triangle jokes and sessions at Hun's.

From such variety of things
That are the Princeton we have known,
Each of us will create his own
Image of Princeton—and time brings
Changes in these. If we come back again,
As we have changed, they will be different then.
So, lightly as we came, let us depart,
What each found here not even he can tell
Wholly, but it is lodged within his heart
And will in memory outlast farewell.

1935 CLASS HISTORY

JOSEPH C. HAZEN, JR.

IN THIS, the history of the Class of Nineteen Hundred and Thirty-five, it is our intent to set forth those significant facts concerning outstanding incidents which have taken place within the past four years, those names which were most influential in the making of our history, and only such dates and figures as seem particularly essential and interesting. In a work of this length it is obviously impossible to present more than a skeleton outline of a complicated series of events, but we trust that it will be such that from it a fuller history may readily be reconstructed in the mind . . . a chronological organization of events intended to serve as a cue for further and more profound recollection.

1931-1932

The history of this year's graduating class started back in the summer of 'thirty-one, when some thirteen hundred aspirants to a Princeton education received a much-anticipated note from Nassau Hall's committee on admissions, and six hundred and thirty-five of these thrilled at the words: "We are pleased to inform you that, on the basis of your record in the entrance examinations and your school and personal records, you have been admitted to the Freshman Class of Princeton University. . . ." What happened to the remaining six hundred and sixty-five would-be Princetonians is not for us to surmise, but it is indeed interesting to note that exactly that number of names appeared upon the freshman roster of a certain New Haven university that fall.

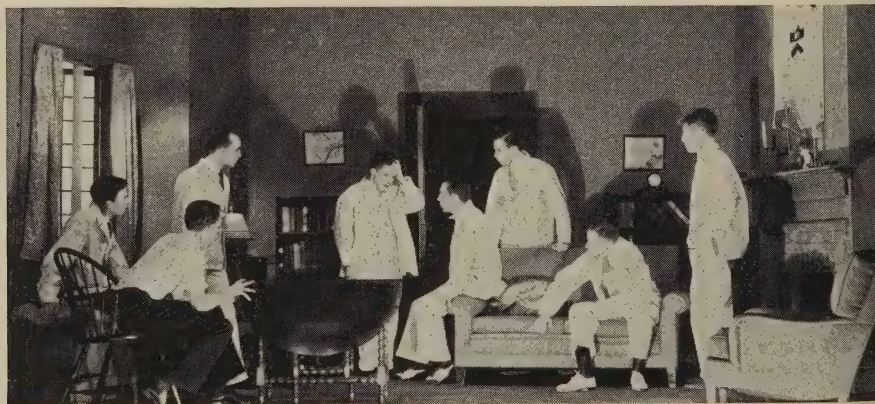

The remainder of that summer was spent in preparation for our advance on Princeton, and on September thirtieth the Class of 'Thirty-five mustered for the storming of the campus. Having survived the barrages of erstwhile agents and the fusillades of administrative welcomes, we accomplished our occupation unmolested, except perhaps for the nightly visits of Sophomore super salesmen. With the aid of the Freshman Bible and the campus cops extensive reconnaissance was made, and not for several days did the cogs of learning begin to grind. The fact that we as Freshmen were sorely in need of an education was clearly shown by one of our classmate's answers to the registrar's questionnaire as to the number of his roommates. "Two hundred and ninety-three," was his reply . . . it seems there were that many fellow Freshmen in McCosh ten when he was registering.

Once the opening exercises were complete and the class as a whole oriented, our lives henceforth were governed largely by compulsions—scholastic, athletic, and questionable. We learned of a new meaning for the word,

"Uniform"; the majority of us preferred crew and football when signing up for fall exercise; and not a few of us investigated the over-rated attractions of Trenton and Kingston. We attended en masse the varsity football games but with less zest than our Freshman Reception, for at that time we, in the eyes of the world, were smoothies. The varsity eleven had a rather unsuccessful season, and the yearling squad under Captain Katz Kadlic won but one of its four games. Our class soccer team, lead by Johnse Garrett, was more outstanding with but one loss in seven encounters, while Bob Phenix's harriers captured two out of three meets. It was Julie Gregory, however, who gained the first set of 1935 numerals, by using pro wrestling tactics against his opponent in the annual Freshman-Sophomore Cane Spree. Though we won no other individual bouts that night, we collectively defeated the second classmen both physically and verbally.

We witnessed before the Christmas Holidays the dedication of Fine Hall, Princeton's palatial asylum for the mathematically-minded, the degradation of Blair Tower Clock by some of the boys who thought that the idle hands would make an excellent roulette wheel, and the début of Todd Harris' and Joe Hazen's attempt in the publication world—Princeton's first Freshman Magazine, The Dink. With the coming of Christmas vacation the Triangle Club's "Spanish Blades" went on the road, and we went home to face the music and to pray that Santa Claus would put monkey glands in Princeton's athletic stockings.

The new year saw the diagnosing of the fall's football ailments and the recommendation of a new coach as the remedy. The appointment of

"TIME OF THEIR LIVES"

The Beer-Suit Scene from the Unusually Popular Play of Undergraduate Life, Written by R. E. Nail '33 of Albany, Tex., and Presented by the Theatre Intime, in Our Sophomore Year

Fritz Crisler and his Minnesota colleagues and the winning of the inter-collegiate basketball crown were the first steps taken to rid Old Nassau of its under-emphasis on athletics. Those of us who survived the first attack of mid-year examinations were permitted to play on the winter and spring Freshman teams whose captains were: basketball, Grebauskas; hockey, Stephens; swimming, Skelly; gym, Lewis; fencing, Turney; Wrestling, Snelham; track, McWilliams; crew, Symington; baseball, McCormick; lacrosse, Rytina and Wardell; tennis, Flynn; and golf, Marks. The two most spectacular seasons were enjoyed by the wielders of foils and rackets who emerged undefeated; but credit for the most outstanding one-man event goes to Alex McWilliams who in breaking the University pole vault record won 1935's first major "P." Our class teams that year engaged in ninety-four contests of which they won fifty-four and tied two, victories with Yale being split seven and seven.

Speaking of leaders, Peter Blanchard was chosen captain of the class, while Bill Chapin and Jim Skelly were elected to assist him in the offices of vice-president and secretary and treasurer.

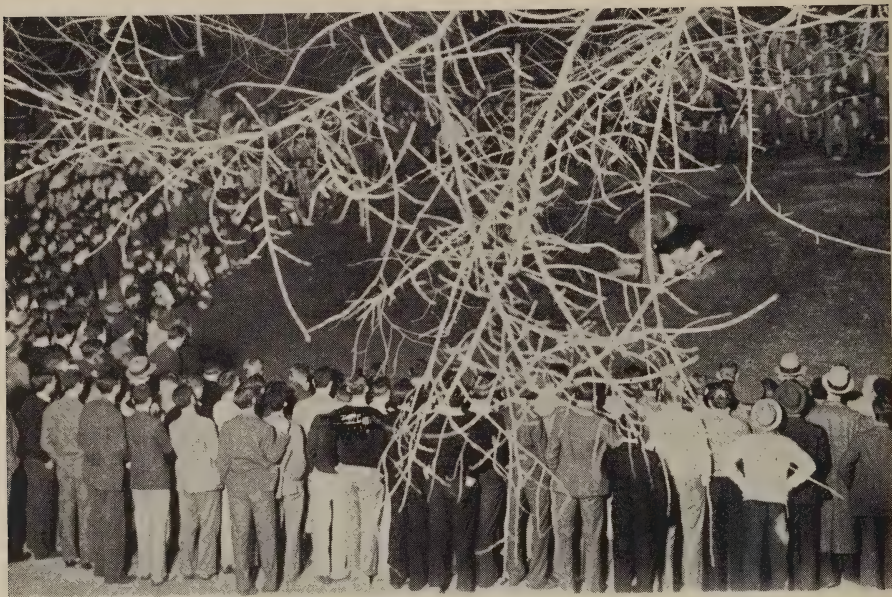

Two events of peculiar interest to Princeton punctuated the second term of that year—the kidnapping of the Lindbergh baby from the neighboring town of Hopewell and the appointment of Mr. Duffield to occupy temporarily the presidential chair left vacant by the resignation of Princeton's beloved "Jack" Hibben.

After a pleasant spring marked for the most part by the upperclassmen's attractive houseparty guests and their still more attractive cars, the Class of 'Thirty-five doffed their dinks, packed in moth balls their half-dozen cleverly garnered clappers, and completed what has been voted their least enjoyable year in Princeton.

SOPHOMORE YEAR

1932-1933

In the fall of 'thirty-two, punch drunk after a week of handshakes and back slaps, we donned flannels and numerals and set about being Sophomores to the best of our ability. With our return came Princeton's challenge to the press commentators on Nassau smoothieism—the Class of 'Thirty-six, made up wholly of prep school athletes—football captains, their managers, and even their promoters! Since, however, Freshmen are not permitted to participate in varsity contests, the season on the gridiron was only a mediocre one with no major victories. The best football was undoubtedly played against Michigan, whom, with the aid of Chamberlain, Delaney, Dudley, Haggin, Jones, Kadlic, Kalbaugh, Marks, Nelson, and Wardell, Princeton held to a fourteen to seven score. This year's Cane Spree was still more successful for the Sophomores than the last, with Ros Hart and Fred Owens winning two of the three bouts.

J. A. GREGORY '35 WINS IN FRESHMAN CANE SPREE

With the approach of the presidential elections a questionnaire was circulated among the men of Princeton to discover which way the wind was blowing. It would seem that the undergraduate wind blew straight up and down, for Hoover was given the decision by a three to one vote. It is indeed interesting to note that the janitors in the same poll conceded Roosevelt the election by a two to one majority.

After we had attended the Triangle's première of "It's the Valet," and read of the resignation of Keene Fitzpatrick as track mentor and Wittmer as basketball coach, we packed our trunks for our second Christmas vacation . . . this time prepared to talk to the folks back home of moral victories and promising prospects.

Upon our return the next year, some ten days later, we beheld Asa Bushnell sewing patches upon the breaches of athletic relationships. It was formally announced that Harvard and Princeton were now the best of friends, and that Dartmouth, after an absence of seventeen years, was to appear on the football schedule that fall. A little later on Joline Hall with its parquet flooring was dedicated. This increase in the number of dormitory rooms may have had something to do with the declaration made the next week to the effect that Princeton's entrance requirements had been lowered from fifteen to twelve units.

Twice during the spring of this particular year we signed away our lives. First, after about two weeks of "a fate worse than death," four hundred and thirty-eight of us one Monday morning were slipped the grip by one of the eighteen upperclass eating clubs. Secondly, at a somewhat later date little pink cards were signed indicating which department of study we chose to enter. Economics, History, and Politics led the field in popularity.

The fact that Dean Gauss had called off the Winter Prom, the fact that Princeton in May is a beautiful place, and mainly the fact that there were five hundred and sixty-six feminine guests here for the festivities made our first houseparty experience one not soon to be forgotten. There was, however, one incident of that season which is recalled with sadness—the tragic death of John Grier Hibben, a man beloved by all who were privileged to know him. Just as there was mourning on that day, so was there rejoicing on the third of June when Mr. Dodds changed his name to President Dodds.

With the last day of final examinations the Class of 'Thirty-five, which had been led throughout the year by the same officers as of the preceding year, left Princeton to its reunions and Mike, the proctor, to his famous baseball team—left to spend the summer vacation placing bets on the success of the next season's football team.

1933-1934

Back again the next fall with a wardrobe of knickers, long socks, and Einstein. Back again to witness one of the most amazing come-backs in the realm of sport. The varsity football squad that fall emerged from a difficult nine game schedule undefeated and with two hundred and seventeen points scored against its opponents' eight. A huge championship bonfire, the first since 1926, celebrated the achievement.

Shortly after fall athletics had ceased, Fran Smith and Bill Fortune were elected chairman and business manager of the Daily Princetonian which steadily improved under their guidance.

The Grim Reaper again causes a spot of sadness in this history when we recall the passing of William Roper, football coach between 1919 and 1928, Princeton's greatest decade on the gridiron.

This year when Christmas finally rolled along, those of us who did not travel with the Triangle troupe and its "Fiesta," stormed the home towns to offer "I told you so's" and to collect on the summer's wagers.

CHAMPIONSHIP BONFIRE

In regard to winter sports the Class of 'Thirty-five distinguished itself by being steady participants in all of the hockey games—as spectators—and by furnishing four men to the varsity basketball squad, Grebauskas, Murray, Weaver, and Whitehead. Tommy Snelham won laurels in the wrestling championships by capturing the one hundred and twenty-six pound title, while Red Barrett dived his way into second place in the inter-collegiate swimming finals. All this, however, did not take place until we had undergone another in a series of three hour examinations and had learned how the other half lives during a period of club-calling. A boon to the latter, The Bric-a-brac, published by Chairman Dick Davis and financially managed by Dutch Schundler, came from the press at this time, and a beautiful piece of work it was.

March of 'thirty-four saw the first recognition of the class brain trust when these nine men were elected to the Junior section of the Phi Beta Kappa Society: Bretall, Coates, Mayer, Moulton, Murray, Northwood, Page, Super, and Thomas. This exposure of the Class's mental ability was further augmented by Dean Root's announcement of the revolutionary

SENIOR PRINCETONIAN MEMBERS

“No-course Plan” for Senior study. However, when the next semester came along, but few of us seemed particularly interested in the new scheme.

Highsaw was awarded the Junior Oratorical Prize, and Dave Chamberlain was chosen as our treasurer, the other class officers being reelected.

The baseball squad, due to its mediocrity, entertained us less than did the customary festal events of a Princeton springtime. Nevertheless the experience gained by such men as McCormick, Myers, Neel, Propst, and Reichel aided greatly in the betterment of this year’s team.

After our first taste of those inventions of the devil, comprehensive examinations, the year closed with Asa Bushnell’s budget balancer—the Invitation Track Meet at which we saw world records shattered like so many window panes after a local snowstorm.

SENIOR YEAR

1934–1935

Last fall we returned for our final installment of a college education weakened in number by sixty, who since Freshman year had given up either by choice or by request. We saw a football team carry on in a style similar to that set by its predecessor until that woebegone day when the Yalies trimmed us mentally, physically, spiritually, and seven to nothing.

Perhaps the most outstanding game on the schedule was that with Harvard, the first since the feud in 1926. The Tiger and the Lampoon, amid much publicity, significantly combined to celebrate this occasion with the largest college comic in history. The officers of the former publication were Joe Hazen, chairman, and Todd Harris, business manager.

It was during this football season, and much to the resentment of the coaches, that the newly formed bicker rules went haywire; and Dame Rumor has it four Freshmen, two Seniors, and a janitor are still wondering how they got into the Cap and Gown section.

Under the leadership of Sid Johnson the Triangle Club's musical extravaganza, "Stags at Bay," written by Buckey Roulon-Miller and Harry Brooks, surpassed in reputation all preceding shows and has thus established itself as a criterion for future presentations. Those of us who were connected with the organization enjoyed a most successful trip, while those who were not so privileged had to pay for their Christmas liquor.

Having drunk toasts to the much anticipated year of 1935, we came back to Tigertown to recuperate and learned that, greatly to their credit, Henry Page and Sam Welles had been chosen to represent Princeton as Rhodes Scholars. The class as a whole likewise did itself justice in a scholastic way, for on the basis of the first term's work the Seniors ranked above the other three classes with an average group of two and five-tenths.

SENIOR TIGER MEMBERS

While Peter Blanchard remained for four years president of his class, Dave Chamberlain and Johnse Garrett were this year elected to offices of vice-president and secretary and treasurer.

Alumni Day saw the dedication of Princeton's life-size funny paper, the gymnasium murals; and on the same day Henry Page once more stepped forward, this time for the presentation of The Pyne Prize—Nassau's most coveted award. Highsaw again ran off with the debating honors, and the following men were given permission to hang the Phi Beta Kappa charm on their watch chains: Adamson, Andreas, Austin, Bennett, Benson, Boogher, Buffum, Davis, Echeverria, Hack, Hamilton, Harlow, Highsaw,

SENIOR TRIANGLE MEMBERS

Livingston, Mather, McClung, Oliver, Owens, Per-Lee, Roe, Roop, Thum, and Trent.

So much for the brains—now for the muscle men. In review of the sports of the Senior year we see these classmates occupying the responsible positions of team captains: football, All-American Kalbaugh; soccer, Garrett; basketball, Grebauskas; wrestling, 155-pound intercollegiate champion Gregory; swimming, Grannis; gymnastics, Lewis; polo, Sullivan; squash, Stephens; fencing, Harris; baseball, Myers; track, McWilliams; lacrosse, All-American Wardell; rugby, Quigley; tennis, Flynn; and golf, Cremin.

By the time the spring recess came along we as a class had witnessed five hundred and seventy-four varsity athletic contests and had seen Princeton teams win three hundred and sixty-five of them. Seventy-two of these engagements were with Yale, and the Elis remained on top by six victories, while Harvard and Princeton in their sixty encounters came out all even.

The spring vacation was for most of us only a name, for theses came due, and the library proved a poor place for vacationing. With but a month separating us from graduation, which in turn would separate us physically from Princeton, we sat about in beer suits enjoying the verdant campus, singing senior songs and spending an hour every Sunday not going to chapel. Now, with comprehensives behind us, we realize that the Class of 'Thirty-five is about to face the problems and examinations of the wide world for which Princeton for the last four years has tried to prepare us. We realize that in doing so Princeton life and a Princeton education have been and will continue to be something real and valuable—something for which we will always be grateful—something that will forever arouse in us a song "In Praise of Old Nassau."

1935 MEMORIAL COMMITTEE

1935 CLASS MEMORIAL FUND

FOLLOWING the precedent set by graduating classes for the past nineteen years, the Class of 1935 has made provision for a gift to the University in token of its appreciation of the years spent in Princeton and as a concrete expression of confidence in the work Princeton is doing. While many classes prior to 1916 have made gifts to the University, it was only in that year that the custom was established of raising money for class gifts by means of twenty-year endowment insurance.

As graduation approached, the 1935 Memorial Committee was appointed to raise a fund, which would enable us to make a fitting gift to our University at our Twentieth Reunion.

In order that the fund might represent a class gift in the truest sense, complete participation of the class membership was the goal. Individual Seniors were asked to subscribe to policies which they were sure they could afford.

Despite current financial conditions, the Committee on the whole has met with admirable response. While the Fund has understandably not yet been subscribed up to the amounts of some other years, a plan is being considered whereby on the hoped-for return of better times non-participating members of the Class may be able to join the endowment plan or at least contribute to the fund when it is mature.

The Committee wishes to extend its thanks to those members of the Class who have helped to make our Memorial Fund possible with their participation and cooperation and especially to those untiring assistants who helped in our work of subscription.
